

If works are not protected by copyright (copyright expired, work donated to public domain, federal government created document), this checklist is not necessary. When determining whether you may use copyrighted works in teaching, scholarship, and student works, the law permits some uses for nonprofit education purposes, including . Fair uses do not require permission from the copyright owner. You must make a reasonable and good faith determination that your proposed use is a fair use. This checklist will help you make that determination.

Check all boxes that apply and retain a copy of this form with the corresponding materials. Remember, you do not need to have all the factors in your favor to justify fair use of a copyrighted work. If the factors appear evenly split or supporting fair use, then then your proposed use of the copyrighted work is supported by fair use. If you have questions, please contact your college or university Intellectual Property Coordinator for assistance.
